

Save lives today by supporting the Life Giving Water Fund

Did you know that 70% of rural villages in Zambia have no access to clean water? Water we take for granted in this country? Women and children in the villages must travel miles each morning to secure water from shallow pits or impure streams. During the frequent droughts, these sources are nonexistent. Crops suffer, disease and death rise sharply.

In an effort to dramatically improve the lives of the people in Zambia, we at Life Giving Water Fund are committed to providing deep wells located in specific villages of Zambia. Each well can impact the lives of thousands of people.

In 2002, our founder, Richard Hachoose, himself a Zambian, showed us the need for reliable water sources in Zambia. Our first well project provided a reliable source of fresh water for Pemba, his home village. Subsequently, we provided pumps and water storage tanks for an orphanage at Numumu and a deep well for the village of Hucuundu.

LGWF will sink deep (approximately 200 feet), lined wells as compared to the shallow, less expensive wells that are often provided by international relief organizations. Shallow wells are useless during the midst of severe droughts. Deep wells tap into underground water tables that are less susceptible to the effects of droughts. This works because:

- We utilize a competitive bid process to contract with drilling companies in Zambia that have the equipment needed to dig lined, deep wells (boreholes) in the area.
- We have an in-country manager who oversees each of our LGWF projects.
- We have your support

Yes, the success of The Life Giving Water Fund is dependent on the willingness of impassioned individuals and organizations who want to contribute their time, efforts, and resources to dramatically improve the lives of children in this way.
